The Fed Govt's NAPLAN tests won't be administered by teachers in public schools, after the Australian Education Union voted to boycott the plan today, concerned results would be used to create league tables that would disadvantage some schools. Angelo Gavrielatos, Federal President, Australian Education Union, says the decision means the tests will only go ahead if the Govt introduces new measures. Julia Gillard, Fed Minister for Education, says the Govt intends to ask parents to supervise the tests, despite opposition from the unions and parents groups. The Independent Education Union says the test will go ahead in private schools.
